Location: ☑ Original Location □ Moved (date __________) Original Location:

Design (The combination of physical elements that create the form, plan, space, structure, and style. Describe additions and/or alterations from the original design, including dates--known or estimated--when alterations were made): The one-story frame religious building remains unchanged from the description provided in the 1999 National Register nomination (see National Register of Historic Places Registration Form, 1999).

Setting (The physical environment–natural or manmade–of a historic site. Describe the setting and how it has changed over time.): the setting remains unchanged from the description provided in the NR Registration Form.

Workmanship (The physical evidence of the crafts of a particular culture or people during a given period in history. Describe the distinctive elements.): The physical evidence from the period that defines this as a typical Park City mining era house are the simple methods of construction, the use of non-beveled (drop-novelty) wood siding, the plan type, the simple roof form, the informal landscaping, the restrained ornamentation, and the plain finishes.

Feeling (Describe the property's historic character.): The physical elements of the site, in combination, convey a sense of life in a western mining town of the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.

Association (Describe the link between the important historic era or person and the property.): The site is one of the few remaining religious buildings remaining in Park City from the mining era.

This site was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1999. It was built in 1907 and retains its historic integrity. As a result, it meets the criteria set forth in LMC Chapter 15-11 for designation as a Landmark Site.

5 SIGNIFICANCE

Builder: ☑ Not Known □ Known: (source: )

The site must represent an important part of the history or architecture of the community. A site need only be significant under one of the three areas listed below:

1. Historic Era:
   - ☑ Settlement & Mining Boom Era (1868-1893)
   - ☑ Mature Mining Era (1894-1930)
   - ☑ Mining Decline & Emergence of Recreation Industry (1931-1962)

   As noted in the 1999 National Register nomination, "Constructed in October 1907, St. John's Swedish Lutheran Church is significant as one of the few remaining historic church buildings in the mining town of Park City, the largest historic metal mining town in Utah. In a state settled and dominated by members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (LDS or Mormon church), Park City was an anomaly. Because of the expediency of the settlement and the various backgrounds of the people who inhabited Park City, the Mormon church had little influence in the community. This provided the opportunity for different faiths, including the Lutherans, to establish churches in a city where a single religion did not play a major role in the development of the community. St. John's is significant under Criterion A for this reason, as a stabilizing institution established during Park City's era as a mining boom town and representative of Lutheran missionary activity in western mining towns".

2. Persons (Describe how the site is associated with the lives of persons who were of historic importance to the community or those who were significant in the history of the state, region, or nation):

3. Architecture (Describe how the site exemplifies noteworthy methods of construction, materials or craftsmanship used during the historic period or is the work of a master craftsman or notable architect):

St. John’s Swedish Lutheran Church, Park City, Summit County, UT

Narrative Description

Built in 1907, St. John’s Swedish Lutheran Church is located on the uphill (west) side of Park Avenue which runs parallel to Main Street in Park City. The one-story building is of wood-frame and drop-siding construction, with a standing-seam, sheet metal-covered roof, and rests on a concrete foundation. A Victorian Eclectic-style building, it exhibits vernacular characteristics of both the Victorian Gothic and the Greek Revival style, both commonly used for church buildings in Utah during the mid-to-late-nineteenth and early-twentieth centuries.

The front (east) facade has a small entry vestibule that currently has a set of glass-paneled double doors. An historic photo of the church reveals that the original doors were wood paneled but these were replaced for insulation purposes. Above the doors is a decorative stained glass transom, and above this, a simple wood pediment. The stained glass is not original; the historic photo shows plain glass in the transom. This vestibule is approximately eight and a half feet wide and five feet deep with a gable roof. Beyond the vestibule is the primary, gable-end elevation of the building. Both of these gables have cornice returns. The gables also contain some simple, decorative gable trim that was recently applied by the current owner at the same time as the doors and stained glass. An historic photo of the church reveals that there was no decoration in the gables; the only ornamentation on the church was a cross at the tip of the gable roof. The entrance to the building is from a landing which is accessed by stairs on either side. The landing, stairs and balustrades were constructed in early 1980s to meet building safety code requirements. The original entrance to the church consisted of approximately five-foot wide wood steps which led straight up the steep embankment from the street to the vestibule.

The north and south elevations of the church each contain three pointed-arch windows with operable lower sashes for ventilation. The original glazing was replaced with stained glass panels, although the original window openings and framing were retained. There is an addition to the rear of the church which is differentiated from the historic building by a stepped down roof line. A back door flanked by windows is on the south elevation of this addition. The rear, or west elevation has two, two-over-two, double-hung windows on the first floor, and a small window in the upper part of the gable. The north elevation has one two-over-two, double-hung window on the addition.

The interior of the vestibule has floor to ceiling wood paneling, with a set of solid wood doors that open up into what was once the sanctuary, and is now the living room. No alterations have been made to this area, and it retains its openness. At the west end are stairs that lead up to a bedroom and a loft. Behind the stairs, on the main level, is the kitchen, a hall, a bath and two bedrooms.

The lot is very narrow with a steep rise to the rear, as is typical for much of the older area of Park City; the house to the north is less than fifteen feet away from the church. The vacant lot to the south of the building was purchased to provide parking and driveway space. There are currently no outbuildings on the property.

St. Johns Swedish Lutheran Church, Park City, Summit County, UT

Narrative Statement of Significance

Constructed in October 1907, St. John’s Swedish Lutheran Church is significant as one of the few remaining historic church buildings in the mining town of Park City, the largest historic metal mining town in Utah. In a state settled and dominated by members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (LDS or Mormon church), Park City was an anomaly. Because of the expediency of the settlement and the various backgrounds of the people who inhabited Park City, the Mormon church had little influence in the community. This provided the opportunity for different faiths, including the Lutherans, to establish churches in a city where a single religion did not play a major role in the development of the community. St. John’s is significant under Criterion A for this reason, as a stabilizing institution established during Park City’s era as a mining boom town and representative of Lutheran missionary activity in western mining towns.

In 1869 significant deposits of silver and lead were discovered in the mountains 35 miles southeast of Salt Lake City. This discovery led to the establishment of a mining camp which would become the town of Park City. Park City became the single largest metal mining community in the state of Utah during the mining boom period of the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth centuries. Park City and Eureka are the only two mining towns that have survived to the present day. In 1880 Park City was incorporated as a town. On December 2, 1882 the town suffered a setback when fire struck and destroyed several buildings on Main Street. On June 19, 1898 a fire started early one morning in a boarding house near the center of town. There was a strong wind that day which blew the fire out of control, destroying over 200 buildings.

The policy of L.D.S. Church President Brigham Young had on mining only allowed whatever mining was necessary to develop and sustain a self-sufficient community. He would not support Church members who mined for precious metals. Consequently, Park City developed as a primarily non-Mormon community. The early prospectors and miners were people of a variety of religious faiths. Many were Catholic, and the Priests came from Salt Lake City on Sundays for mass. St. Lukes Episcopal Church was built in 1881; destroyed in the 1898 fire rebuilt in 1901 and is still standing at 523 Park Avenue. This wood frame building was the first church in Park City, and was placed on the National Register in 1980. The Congregational Church was built next; it also burned in the 1898 fire but was not rebuilt.

built of stone, however it was also destroyed in the 1898 fire. Located at 523 Park Avenue, it was rebuilt in 1884 and placed on the National Register in 1978.

The Lutheran church was the state church of Scandinavia. The first Lutheran church in Utah was organized in Salt Lake City on July 18, 1882. This particular branch was the Swedish Lutheran Church with five members. Lutherans came to Utah for two main reasons: the first was to proselytize among the Mormons, and the second was to serve the Lutherans who had migrated to Utah to work as employees of the railroads, as merchants, miners and farmers. It was thought that some of the ten thousand Scandinavian Mormons who had come to Utah could be 'won back' to their original religion. Lutheran congregations were formed on the basis of language.

The mining communities in Utah were populated by people of a variety of nationalities and diverse religions, many of whom were Swedes and Finns of Lutheran background. Ministers from Salt Lake City and Ogden traveled to the mining camps for services on an irregular basis. St. John's Swedish Lutheran Church in Park City was organized in 1902 by Oscar Anton Elmquist, a student minister and carpenter by trade. The original 31 members consisted of nine Swedes and twenty two Finns. Services were conducted in Swedish and Finnish, and during the first few years were held in private homes and at the Methodist Episcopal church. After being ordained, Reverend Elmquist was sent to the Elim Lutheran Church in Ogden; he continued to serve the Park City congregation traveling there by train.

The first recorded owners of the property where St. John's Lutheran Church now stands are Amos and Maggie Mosher. In July, 1881 Amos Mosher quit-claimed Lots 5 and 6 to Merrill L. Hoyt; who returned the property to Mosher four months later. In October 1887, Mosher deeded the property

11 Abstract of Title, Coalville, Utah, July 1997. Although the townsite was officially platted, many chose to ignore the legalities of property ownership, and did not purchase their land from the corporation. Property transactions went unrecorded for decades, and inaccurate records combined with inconsistent property descriptions were the result of this early lack of planning and organization.
to Curtis and May Blanchard. They held the property until April, 1905 when it was deeded to Fargo Sherman, who held the land until November of that year when he quit-claimed it to J.W. Bircumshaw. In September, 1906 Bircumshaw deeded the land to St. John's Swedish Lutheran Church.\textsuperscript{12}

John Willard Bircumshaw was born in Nottingham, England in January 1856. According to his obituary, Bircumshaw was a butcher in Park City until 1920. However, the 1912-13 and 1914-15 Utah State Gazetteer show listings for Frank McEwan & J.W. Bircumshaw, saloon at 455 Main Street.

In 1906 the Swedish Lutheran congregation purchased Lots 5, 6, 27 and 28 of Block 3, located on Park Avenue. By the summer of 1907 they had begun construction on the building. The church had a small foyer and a sanctuary with vaulted ceiling; at the rear was a room and a back door. The building was constructed in three weeks at a cost of $2,197.00. The first service was held in the unfinished building in August; the church was dedicated \textit{St. John's Evangelical Swedish Lutheran Church} on October 26, 1907. The congregation boasted that "no other congregation in Park City has been able to build, furnish and dedicate a church in ninety days without a dollar's debt".\textsuperscript{13}

Shortly after the dedication, Reverend Elmquist accepted a pastorate in Iowa, and the congregation never again had a resident pastor. Preachers would travel from Salt Lake City or Ogden for a wedding or funeral, and once a month for Sunday services; staying in the back room. The building was heated with a wood stove and had no indoor plumbing. Services were conducted in Swedish until gradually, by 1920, they were in English. By the 1940's the congregation, along with the population of Park City, had dwindled; the few remaining parishioners traveled to Salt Lake City to worship, and the church was abandoned.\textsuperscript{14}

In May 1966 the abandoned building was deeded to the Pacific Southwest Synod of the Lutheran Church in America. The church was auctioned off, and one week later it was deeded to L. Virginia Santy and Olga Guillaume. The two women kept the property until June 1973 when it was sold to John and Nicky Price. John Price was a contractor who began the conversion of the church into a residence when he dug out a basement, poured a new concrete foundation (which was required by code) and replaced the shed roof on the rear room with a new gable roof. He also created a balcony where the podium had been.\textsuperscript{15} One year later Price sold the church to the current owner, Marion Lintner.

Ms. Lintner purchased the building as a home for herself and her two daughters. It has undergone some modification, specifically to the roof of the rear room, installation of stained glass in the sanctuary windows, application of gable trim, and minor changes to the loft in the interior. The original exterior building materials, massing, and form of the building remain, and most of the historical integrity of the building is still present. The rear addition, though not visible from the street, is compatible and not overwhelming to the church, and can be differentiated as a non-historic addition by the change in roof line.
